27 years of specialized experience

- Assessment and instruction together: 27 years as an evaluator, reading clinician, and district intervention coordinator; thousands of hours of direct work; and dialogue with leading reading and writing researchers. University training is complemented by dozens of specialized workshops in the science of reading and writing, including PAL-II assessment-to-instruction methods.
- Recommendations built for the child: assessment connects reading, writing, and cognitive processes to individualized curriculum guidance. Intervention expertise includes targeted cognitive-process training, multisensory instruction, and Orton-Gillingham-based methods, emphasizing efficient, measurable progress and value.

“My assessment and instructional practices align with IDA’s Knowledge and Practice Standards and The Reading League’s science-of-reading guidance.” — Dennis Saller

His special education legal training includes Lozano Smith and F3 Law symposia, informing practical guidance for parents on school evaluation procedures, educational rights, and options for support.

The evaluation package includes

- Background review to understand learning history and current concerns.
- Formal standardized assessment of reading and writing skills.
- Targeted cognitive-processing and executive-function assessment to clarify contributing factors and overlapping learning and attention needs.
- A written report explaining the findings.
- Individualized curriculum and instructional recommendations tied to learning needs.
- A feedback meeting to discuss results and next steps.

Instruction sessions and curriculum delivery are not included in the evaluation package.
